“New York City homeowners shouldn’t have to depend on rumored promises to ensure the continued affordability of their homes.”

I am proud to have sponsored legislation extending a critical tax abatement for middle-class homeowners in New York City, rightfully one of the first issues the Legislature addressed this year.

However, it is simply another extension of temporary relief.

This is not good enough.

New York City has left us with a broken property tax code, one that is inequitable, complicated and unpredictable. I will continue working to reform the system to bring fairness, simplicity and stability to your property taxes.
