On April 11 I hosted an Education Summit to bring teachers from across the Capital Region together for a round table discussion on issues facing New York's classrooms and how it affects our children. We covered many topics including the state testing policies, the common core curriculum, unfunded state mandates and the Annual Professional Performance Review (APPR).

As a parent of two children in public schools and the spouse of a public school teacher, I share your concerns about the constant changes and cuts to our education system and their potential to affect the quality of education our children receive.
