A Message From Assembly Member Rebecca Seawright

Dear Neighbor,

This week I was honored to be invited to recognize many of the fine civic associations in our district. These organizations, composed of citizen advocates who volunteer to maintain and enhance our community, are a tremendous and vital resource for us all. The knowledge and expertise they share with me on many an issue have assisted me to better represent us all. From the Friends of the Esplanade, who are committed to making our waterfront a more useful and beautiful extension of our neighborhood, to Treadwell Farms, who are celebrating 100 years as an active neighborhood association, to CIVITAS, a group of grassroots leaders from the Upper East Side and East Harlem, who work to improve the quality of life for us all, the outstanding community organizations share our love of our neighborhoods and are one of the reasons our community is unique. I am proud to partner with these and other neighborhood groups and to represent a district with such a strong and continuing tradition of community service.

I am proud to cosponsor the following upcoming events:

- Thursday, May 10 @ 6:30pm- Pay Equity For Women Panel with Community Board 8 at Memorial Sloan Kettering's Rockefeller Research Laboratories, 430 East 67th Street Auditorium

SEAWRIGHT'S ELECTION REFORM BILL PASSES ASSEMBLY

On Wednesday, Assembly Member Rebecca Seawright announced that the New York State Assembly passed A.7518, which would allow candidates to satisfy both local and state requirements when filing to run for election.

Against Prescription Drug Price Changes

requirements do not align. By synergizing the filing process, there is less strain on municipal resources, thereby saving taxpayer dollars.

"A great way to make elections more transparent is to clarify the current filing process, which is cumbersome and duplicative," said Assembly Member Seawright. "In addition to making the use of State resources more efficient, the bill allows for enforcement of filing rules in one place. While we still have a long way to go, this bill is one of many I plan to introduce to make voting easier and more transparent for New Yorkers."

Seawright Supports Child Victims of Sex Trafficking

"Sex trafficking is a global issue that is pervasive in our state and nation. Every year in the United States, as many as 300,000 children are victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Each night in New York State, more than 4,000 underage youth are victims being bought, sold and trafficked for profit. New York has come a long way to ensure protection for victims of these horrific crimes but further measures are necessary to ensure that victims are fully protected by our legal system. Assembly Bill 6823 will establish the crime of sex trafficking of a child and will eliminate the need to prove coercion in a court of law, ensuring that minors are not wrongfully charged with prostitution. I am proud to support this legislation to protect sexually exploited youth from facing additional barriers to justice. Thank you bill sponsor Assembly Member Amy Paulin and Sanctuary for Families for their tireless advocacy," said Assembly Member Rebecca Seawright.

Advocates Urge Passage Of "End Child Trafficking Act"

By ELIZABETH HILL • MAY 2, 2018

With the legislative session in its final weeks, advocates and New York state lawmakers gathered at the capitol Tuesday to urge the state Assembly to pass the End Child Trafficking Act.

The legislation is sponsored by Democratic Assemblywoman Amy Paulin, of the lower Hudson Valley, who says the bill would eliminate the requirement to prove force, fraud or coercion in prosecutions for sex trafficking. She says the measure creates an affirmative defense for victims 19 and younger. Sanctuary for Families — a New York City-based nonprofit that advocates for victims of domestic violence and sex trafficking — led the event at the Legislative Office Building. Executive Director Judy Harris Kluger, a former judge, said the time for action is now.

"Between 2010 and 2015 there has been an 800 percent increase in online sex trafficking of children. The time has come to be in line with federal law and 48 other states," says Kluger.

Sanctuary for Families says state prosecutors cannot build successful cases against traffickers of children unless the victim is willing and able to testify. According to Reverend Que English, CEO and founder of Not on My Watch – a nonprofit working against sex trafficking – trauma suffered as a result of being trafficked and the terror of retaliation often prevent victims from testifying.

"We think about New York being a leader on so many issues in a progressive state. It's really outrageous it's a national embarrassment that we do not have this in New York state," says Seawright.

Although the federal Trafficking Victims Protection Act does not require prosecutors to prove coercion, advocates who rallied in Albany say New York law should be on par with the federal statute.

Assembly Member Rebecca Seawright: Childhood Sexual Abuse Victims Deserve to Have Voices Heard and See Justice Served

Assembly Member Rebecca Seawright announced that she helped pass legislation, known as the Child Victims Act, to enable more victims of childhood sexual abuse to face their abusers in civil or criminal court (A.5885-A). The bill, which the Assembly Majority has consistently championed, extends the civil and criminal statutes of limitations as well as institutes a one-year "look back window" during which past victims will be able to seek justice in court.

"It can take years for victims of childhood sexual abuse to be ready to file charges against their abuser, a brave act that can bring back the pain and trauma of the abuse," said Seawright. "This bill gives victims more time to seek justice and help them move forward with their lives. It's time to stop protecting the perpetrators of these unthinkable crimes."

With over 63,000 children sexually abused each year – and that's just the number of cases that are actually reported – it's imperative that victims have the support they need to recover and hold perpetrators accountable, noted Seawright. Victims often carry their trauma with them for the rest of their lives and are more likely to struggle with drug abuse, experience post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) and contend with severe depression. While the physical and psychological symptoms themselves are severe, many victims delay pressing charges as the majority of perpetrators are known to the child, in a position of power and may even reside in the home.

The Assembly bill would amend the criminal procedure law to extend the statute of limitations and allow criminal cases to be commenced until the victim turns age 28 for felonies and age 25 for misdemeanors. Seawright noted that cases for top-level sex offenses can already be commenced at any time under existing law.

The bill would also push back the statute of limitations to permit civil actions to be brought until the victim's 50th birthday. Additionally, the measure creates a one-year window for adult survivors to revive cases that, under current law, are barred because the statute of limitations has expired. This one-year window is vitally important to allow victims who have lived with the terrible effects of childhood sexual abuse to finally seek justice in the courts.

In addition, the Child Victims Act would treat public and private entities equally by removing the current notice of claim requirement for public entities. Under current law, in most cases, an individual who plans to sue a public entity must notify the entity of the intent to do so within 90 days.

The legislation would also:

- require judges to undergo additional training for cases involving the sexual abuse of minors; and
- give the cases revived under the one-year window a trial preference so they are more rapidly moved forward in court. This recognizes that in many instances, these victims have already had to wait for years to be able to seek justice.

"There is nothing more deplorable than a crime committed against a child," said Seawright. "The depraved individuals who rob children of their innocence must be held accountable, and victims should be able to tell their stories if and when they're ready. It's time for the state Senate to do its part and pass the Child Victims Act. Inaction is completely inexcusable."

professions in law enforcement and firefighting.

NYPD Firefighter Jackie-Michelle Martinez and NYPD Captain Lavonda Wise joined us at a press conference this week in Albany.

Seawright Supports Gender Neutral Bill in Professions

Assembly Member Seawright is proud to support Assembly Bill 8321, which would update antiquated and inaccurate language in state law relating to police officers and firefighters.

The bill would replace all instances of the words “fireman” or “policeman” with the words “firefighter” or “police officer.” This will modernize the outdated language in the state statute to promote the idea that the professions of law enforcement and firefighting are not exclusive based on gender, and to reflect the current reality of the brave women who hold

Assembly Member Rebecca Seawright: Legislation Gives Control of Teacher Evaluations Back to Local School Districts

Assembly Member Seawright announced that she passed legislation to improve teacher evaluations by delinking them from standardized testing and returning control to local school districts (A.10475). This legislation recognizes that what works for one classroom or district may not work for another, Seawright noted.

“New York’s diverse student body is one of our greatest strengths, so let’s treat it like the asset it is,” Seawright said. “We need to let teachers do what’s best for the students in their classrooms and stop pigeonholing them with an evaluation system that puts more stock in testing than in teaching.”

The legislation makes critical corrections to the teacher evaluation system. First, it would eliminate the mandate that teacher evaluations are to be based on their students’ performance on state-created or administered assessments, including the grades 3 through 8 English Language Arts (ELA) and math tests. The state mandate, which sparked widespread anger, was put on hold in December 2015 for four years, and the Assembly's legislation eliminates it completely. This recognizes that a one-size-fits-all approach is not right or effective and allows teachers to focus on providing well-rounded lessons that help their students grow, Seawright noted.
